Highways and Byways in Sussex

by E. V. Lucas (1868-1938)

A very personal and opinionated wander through the Sussex of around 1900, illustrated with anecdotes, literary and poetic quotations, gravestone epitaphs and a gentle sense of humour. The author colours the countryside with his nostalgia for times past and regret for the encroaching future, his resentment of churches with locked doors, and his love of deer parks, ruined castles and the silent hills.

I must add my apologies for my attempts at the Sussex dialect in the chapter on that subject.
